FALSE FIRE ALARMS.

Those New Style Boxes Are Giving New Haven Trouble.

The village cut-ups are having a high old time with the new glass key protectors which New Haven has recently attached to its fire alarm boxes. The new attachments have been in use but a week or two and already 30 of them have been smashed and two false alarms rung in.

From the Year One to within a few weeks, New Haven fire alarm box keys have reposed behind the front doors of safe, sane and conservative burghers who dwell near the boxes to which the keys belonged. From time to time certain parties with a lively blaze on their hands have found it hard to arouse the Goodman of the house in those dim hours when man will sleep despite all. And so some fires have got a good start and some lives have from time to time been lost—and charged against the existing key system.

So now New Haven has followed the lead of more progressive municipalities and put the keys in the box key-holes, covered by a little protecting box with a glass front. Ordinarily this attachment attracts no more attention than a hitching post, but the rural swains who wander over the glass pavements of New Haven when the gas lamps glow cannot resist the novel temptation to jab a knuckle or a knife handle through the thin glass just to hear it tinkle. That only two out of thirty such experiments have resulted in actual false alarms ought to be sufficient to make the New Haven fire officials congratulate themselves rather than cuss the destroying vandals.

CHINESE SOUVENIR.

Frank Speh Presented with a Sword and Scabbard.

Frank Speh of East Derby recently came into possession of a unique souvenir of the Orient when a captain of one of the barges that carries coal to this city presented him with a Chinese sword and scabbard. The scabbard and handle of the sword is made of bone, which is profusely decorated with carvings, representing Orientalists in different dress. The scabbard is made of several pieces of thin bone, but all joints are well fitted and the carvings are extended across joints without the latter in the least marring the effect, they are so perfect. The trophy was secured in the Orient several years ago during an encounter between some Chinamen and Americans of a sailing schooner.
